Regional Wildlife Biologists

Each of the nine North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission (NCWRC) districts is assigned a Wildlife Biologist. These biologists are well-versed in many facets of wildlife management and serve as the primary contact for the NCWRC Division of Wildlife Management in their respective district. While the unexpected is the norm in the wildlife field, these biologists commonly work with private landowners to address wildlife issues such as: wildlife population management, habitat development and management, wildlife disease investigations, and human-wildlife conflicts.
